Where Do I Begin?

Once you become a parent in Baltimore City, it's common to hear the question, "What are you doing about school?" Relax. Use this simple checklist to stay on track with your research and confidently answer, "I have a plan!"

- Check out LiveBaltimore.com/5star for a list of areas in the city with larger homes AND great school options

2-3 years

- Determine if your zoned elementary school offers Pre-K
- Research nearby charter and other public schools offering Pre-K
- Considering private or parochial school? Attend school open houses (usually offered in the fall)

3-4 years

- Determine where you will apply for Pre-K; schedule visits; talk to enrolled families

What are My School Options?

Baltimore City offers many school options to families (many more, in fact, than surrounding counties). Below is a basic overview of the types of schools you might consider when selecting a school for your child.

Public Zoned Schools

- ✎ Your zoned school (if you live in the zone, your child may enroll; Pre-K spaces may be limited)
- ✎ An alternate zoned school (contact the school's office for enrollment availability)

Parochial Schools

- ✎ Enrollment is by application
- ✎ Financial aid and scholarships are available
- ✎ Cost is often less than other independent schools/daycare

Public Charter Schools

- ✎ Seats are determined by lottery
- ✎ Attendance is free of charge
- ✎ Apply to multiple charter schools
- ✎ If the lottery has already taken place, contact the school's office to inquire about any remaining seat availability.

Home Schooling

- ✎ Networks of homeschoolers can answer questions, including the Maryland Homeschool Association
- ✎ If you choose to educate your child at home, you must complete and submit a Home Schooling Notification Form in accordance with state law. To obtain the form or further discuss your options, visit baltimorecityschools.org/page/home-schooling

Private Schools

- ✎ Enrollment is by application
- ✎ Most schools offer financial aid
- ✎ Cost can be comparable to daycare

Common Misconceptions

As you explore schools, you may come across some misconceptions about education in Baltimore City. To help you cut to the truth, we've listed out the most common below.

There is just one "good" public school and one "good" charter school. If I don't get into one of them, I will have to send my child to private school.

There are many quality, public zoned and charter schools that families across the spectrum attend.

City schools don't have heat and air conditioning.

HVAC installation has been a high priority across the district and many schools have been completely renovated or opened brand-new buildings in recent years.

The Great Schools rating is too low for me to send my child there.

Great Schools ratings are not a good measure of Baltimore City schools for numerous reasons. The scores are on a curve against the whole state. Also, measures of poverty are taken into great consideration in the scoring system often leaving Baltimore City with lower scores.

I am only allowed to send my child to their zoned public school.

Your child can attend an elementary school outside of your zone if they have space in your grade.

Charter schools are better than public schools.

Charter schools are public schools. Traditional public schools and public charters both get funding from City Schools. There are both quality charter and traditional schools. The main difference is that charter schools have the ability to offer different curriculum options.

My household income is too high for public Pre-K.

Public Pre-K has different priority levels. Priority 1 is income-based and special needs-based. Public Pre-K spaces go unfilled every year because Priority 1 doesn't fill all openings.

Home school kids don't get to interact with other children.

There are extensive networks online and in person for homeschooling. There is support and opportunities to interact.

My child wouldn't qualify for aid at private school.

Don't make assumptions! Contact individual school(s) to discuss scholarships and financial aid options.

I don't practice any particular religion so I can't go to parochial schools.

Parochial schools are open to all learners.

Our parents think it is better to raise kids in the county.

You always need to do what is best for your family, but sometimes a diverse life full of different experiences is what's best.
